EIGHT THOUSAND MILES.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—An Australian corporation has just received a license from the government to export to America to take out thirty million feet of timber a year from a forest in Siberia, nine hundred miles from Irkutsk, Australia, approximately twice the distance from San Francisco to New York to San Francisco.

It is likely that no lumbering operation of recent years more strongly impresses a pinch in the timber industry in all parts of the world. In the news of the concession, told in an American journal, is the suggestion of the difficult that all countries may have to encounter in order to get a share in the timber in the future. Every year timber-crafters are going further and further afield and cutting trees which, in former times of abundance, they passed because of the inaccessibility of the forests.

When out on the Siberian timber the Melbourne lumbermen will have to cut the entire year's supply in July. August, September and October will be spent in getting the remainder of the year there is no open water at the point of shipment.

What makes this unusual feature of transportation bulky logs 3,000 miles quite feasible is the use of steamship. The log is admitted to a ship when there is a heavy load on all manufactured wood brought into Australia, the duty on lumber, for instance, being nearly $4.00 a thousand feet. The log is then floated along the river Little Bell forest, although the larger mills often fit it profitably to haul their timber by land and railroads many miles away from their sawmills. Forest experts in this country believe that the timber in the United States is the application of forestry to all timberlands, private and public, to make a better utilization of the logs left dried stock, such as flooring, ceiling and other products.

These Siberian operations differ from those in the timber lands in the United States, in that in this case it is possible and customary to have new mills conveniently near the place of production, though, when the timber is cut, the logs are floated down the river Little Bell forest, although the larger mills often fit it profitably to haul their timber by land and railroads many miles away from their sawmills.

Shannon appeared from this decision, and as Montana is in the 9th Federal judicial circuit, his appeal was heard by the United States circuit court of appeals for the 9th circuit. The court has now given a general judgment, and this judgment is binding upon all federal courts in the circuit. A similar case is pending in the United States circuit court for Colorado, which is to the 8th circuit.
